What He Was Waiting For.

Lawyer Charles E. Eddy, a successful practitioner of the old school, has long enjoyed a reputation for dry humor and caustic sarcasm. He talks in a distinct, deliberate manner, with a deep bass voice, and has a high regard for personal and professional dignity and is scrupulous in his observance of it.

One day a gentleman who was wont to intrude himself upon the old gentleman caught up with him on the street. This gentleman had with him a dog of the Irish setter breed. The youngsters about the streets had taken a fancy to the dog, and at their command to "sit," "charge," etc., he was prone to attend.
